

There are four basic types of car in the world And you can own all of them.

A luxury car.

An estate car.

A performance car.

A cross-country car.

Now you can drive four cars at once in the shape of our new Range Rover. You'll be the owner of a luxury car, a performance car, an estate car and a cross-country car.

First, a luxury car. We quote from our engineers' report: 'Driver and passenger comfort of a degree not previously obtained at anything like the price . . . superior suspension and internal appointments.'

Second, a performance car. The 3,528cc V8 engine gives a top speed of around 100 mph. There's permanent four wheel-drive (usually only found on £7,000 cars) giving road-holding that out-classes most two-wheel drive cars.

Third, an estate car. With the back seat down there's room for loads of up to 1,200 lbs. And the top half of the divided tail board is self-supporting, so you can safely leave it open when you're carrying extra long loads.

And fourth, a cross-country car. The chassis is as strong as a Land-Rover's (can you think of anything tougher?). And like the Land-Rover the painted chassis and aluminium body panels resist rust and corrosion. The sturdy suspension, combined with an automatic ride-levelling device, gives an unbeatably smooth ride cross-country, laden or unladen. And a permanent four-wheel drive system makes it virtually impossible to get bogged down.

The Range Rover could be the answer if you're looking for one of the above four cars.

And if it so happens that you'd find all four quite useful, then the Range Rover is definitely the answer.

For the first time, you can have four cars under one roof.
